The fineness of her characterizations in minuteness and fidelity to detail, will be easily recognizable to any one at all familiar with plantation life in the South. The hot headed fire eating colonel whose dignity is always being ruffled and who considers it necessary to arrange a duel each time he thinks. to arrange a duel each time he thinks his "bonah" has been assailed; then there is the quiet, chivilrous type of gentleman, who in his courtly grace, reminds us of the word pictures of the southern cavaliers who were famous a hundred years ago also we find the mischievous child, "Anner Lizer" full of pranks, practical jokes and animal spirits, reminding us at times of the anties of a monkey and unconsciously bringing the Darwinian theory back to our minds. Another character in the play that makes a strong impression upon the audience is "Aunt Doshy" one upon the audience is "Aunt Doshy" one of the familiar faithful type of servants in southern homes a generation ago, who, when freedom came, elected to remain with the family to who I they belonged rather than go amongst strangers. A faithful ally of the master and mistress, more friend than servitor. These and many other characters are drawn by Mrs. Parker in a life-like and natural manner and so distinctive are the different characters that the spec-

My Dear Mr. Gregory-I have considered the proposition with which you have honored me carnestly, thoughtfully, prayerfully. It behooves as who are past middle age to weigh well a step of such gigantic importance to us both. I acknowledge to forty-two, and you have told me that years ago. Experience has proven to me set in our ways to live together as that the claims made for this remedy husband and wife? I will admit that the house. If I happened to catch cold, it settled in my kidneys and aggravated the trouble. I used any number of rem. Nevertheless man is like a great big good natured dog—unconscious of his power or, if conscious of it, loath to use power or, if conscious of it, loath to use edies but found more relief from Doan's It against our sex. He is unaware of though without intending to be brutal. I am going over in my mind some of these idiosyncrasies of man in the abstract with a view to determining whether I had better venture. I admit that I am undecided. I will try and inform you. Sincerely, Elizabeth Montgomery. My Dear Miss Montgomery - You Mr. and Mrs. Den McAllister of Chelsea are not expected to marry an abstract vere here Friday and called upon Mr. man, but one Gregory. I do not look upon you simply as woman, but as one Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Drury were at South Barre yesterday and called upon their aunt, Mrs. E. H. Drury. woman whom I love. Woman is a perpetual paradox, a chronic conuntric aunt, Mrs. E. H. Drury. drum, an unknown quantity of unexpected possibilities and contradictions. She is man's greatest blessing and the ultimate cause of all his troubles. She Mrs. Harvey Gay expects to go the first of the week to Ohio, where Mr. Gay has good and noble and his greatest tempis his chief inspiration to all that is tation to folly and sin.

to arrive at a decision at an early date

You see by these few idiosyncrasies of your sex that a man who marries. abstract woman is a fool. My love is all concentrated on an individual, and that individual is your own sweet self. I am, with undying affection, yours, Algernon Gregory.

Dear Mr. Gregory-If I was undecided before, your note has rendered me far more chary of linking my fate with one who has such peculiar ideas concerning my sex. Besides, since writing you other traits of men have come up before me for consideration, and I confess that many of them are not attractive. Man is a sensual creature, with no conception of a pure or holy love unalloyed with passion. He will rear like a lion at his wife before dinner and hand her his pocketbook after he has filled his stomach. He expects her to wear a smile when he comes home tired from his daily avocation, then proceeds at dinner to spill claret over her new tablecloth and after dinner to fill the curtains with

I am still thinking of your flattering proposition. Cordially, Elizabeth Montgomery.

My Dear Miss Montgomery-I fear I did not make my meaning plain to you. if woman is a paradox, she is a very delightful paradox-that is, at times. If woman is the cause of man's trouble, it must be admitted to her credit that as soon as he shakes off a trouble with one woman he is crazy to walk into another trouble with another woman. Is it not his own fault if he complains when the woman he loves is silent, then wishes to bottle her when she talks him to death? And why will a man tire a woman with every form of devotion when there are so many examples of the clinging affection of women for their wife beating husbands? These are truths which invite our careful consideration. With the usual expressions of affection, Algernon Gregory.

Mr. Gregory-I am thoroughly convinced that no man entertaining such notions of women in the abstract is fit to take a wife. The consequences of my acceptance of your offer, such consequences being derived from your letters, would be as follows: I should at once plunge you into trouble, tempt you to sin. You would wish to escape from your alliance with me to enter upon another alliance with another woman. I should tire of your devotion (or what you would doubtless call devotion) and encourage you to beat me. Such being the case, I have decided to decline your very flattering offer with sincere thanks. Yours respect-Elizabeth Montgomery.

Dear Miss Montgomery-If I were not "loath to use my power against your sex"-I would be tempted to hold you to an accountability under the doctrine | of categorical syllogisms for your logical deductions. On my part I began this series of notes by pronouncing your sex "an unknown quantity of unexpected possibilities." You have proved yourself a woman in the abstract as well as an individual. During this correspondence I have formed my conclusions as to what you would eventually do. I thought of what you might be expected to do, then assumed that you would do the opposite. My prognosis has been in every respect

But enough of this, I pronounce you, woman as you are, the dearest object on earth, and I shall pass a lonely old age unless you make it unmeasurably happy. Sweetheart, I am Your Lover.

Dearest Algernon-Come and see me tomorrow evening. GWENDOLIN ADAMS.
